WHY IS IT L-S QUANTISH HEDGE FUND TIME?

the “long” part of long-short is essential in the long run...

Politicians have learned that re-electability is maximized, and crisis severity (at least in the short-term) is minimized, by higher asset prices, which are trivially easy for policymakers to cause (in nominal dollars) over the long-term.

WHY IS IT L-S QUANTISH HEDGE FUND TIME?

But...equity valuations are on the full side.

How do you withstand inevitable bouts of volatility?

U.S. treasury bonds, previously the easy, liquid hedge to an equity portfolio, have been getting progressively more expensive for the past 40 years.

WHY IS IT L-S QUANTISH HEDGE FUND TIME?

As the market is largely dependent on Fed policy, correlations between equities and bonds have turned positive

Reunited U.S. stocks, bonds 90-day correlation highest since 1999

Assets Have Tanked at Two of the World's Biggest Short Sellers

Jim Chanos' Kynikos Associates and Jim Carruthers' Sophos Capital got much smaller in 2020, according to new regulatory filings.

Chanos, arguably the most well-known short seller in the world, lost more than 50 percent of its assets last year. Kynikos ended 2020 with about $405 million in regulatory assets under management, down from around $932 million the prior year, according to annual ADV filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The long bull market has punished Chanos for years. In 2018, when Institutional Investor profiled him, Kynikos ran just under $2 billion, having already lost almost three-quarters of his assets since the financial crash of 2008, when it ran $7 billion.

Sophos had an even more dramatic decline than Kynikos.

The firm started 2020 as the world's largest short seller with $1.16 billion in regulatory assets under management. But by year end, the firm was winding down some positions and scaling back, as Institutional Investor previously reported. Sophos ended 2020 with $258 million, according to its ADV.

THE EXPOSURES I MOST WANT NOW

for positive beta:

Long businesses with sustainably strong ROIC and attractive cash flow relative to their valuations (*somewhat hard to find)

Long affordable call options on any reasonable asset
(e.g. July monthly SPY 425 calls at 11.98 implied vol)

THE EXPOSURES I MOST WANT NOW

for negative beta:

POST-PUMP EPICENTER STONKS

Short perpetually unprofitable businesses >$1 bil market cap which have mooned by overpromising to a gullible shareholder base and will underdeliver (position size is key to avoid being squoze)

Long affordable put options or put options structures on any very overpriced asset
